Anchoring || focalism is a cognitive bias for an individual to rely too heavily on an initial piece of information offered (known as the "anchor") when making decisions.. The original description of the anchoring effect came from psychophysics where it was noticed when judging stimuli along a continuum that the first and last stimuli were used to compare the other stimuli.

There are only two needs that matter the most to men: the need to belong and the need for appreciation. This should come as no surprise. We are hardwired to be social and to naturally seek connections with others. This connection, however, because of the sheer premise of society comes to us without a struggle.
